

In the Friendly Sky

The prostitute is sitting next to my wife on the train reading Vonnegut,
High,
Listening to a track from Steve Miller's The Joker.
We were coming back from the airport.
What can be said after a long trip?
Which was harder, our trip,
Or hers?

Jason Gallagher was a contributing editor at Evergreen Review. He is a member of The Unbearables poetry collective and has had work appear in The Otter as well as in the Kind of a Hurricane Press anthologies The Seasons and Storm Cycle and in the first two issues of Post[blank]. He has also had his book reviews published in Sensitive Skin, Gainsayer and The Otter. He lives in Upper Manhattan with his wife, fellow poet Brendaliz Guerrero, and works as an adjunct English instructor at Borough of Manhattan Community College and Brooklyn College.

The Pangolin Review, Issue 13, November 2019